

Pip's story by Colleen Collier

Greyhounds make wonderful pets because they are gentle, intelligent, tolerant and so affectionate, (they just love to be with you). Greyhounds love their humans so much that they are sometimes referred to as 'velcro' dogs. One of the myths that surround them is that they need a lot of exercise. This could be not be further from the truth as they are great couch potatoes and require only a small walk each day for physical and mental health. They rarely bark, have no 'doggy' smell, don't malt and respond well to training. What could be better?

Pip was found abandoned and living in a cane field three years ago. Paul and I adopted her through ART, (Animal Rehousing Tablelands), after seeing her sad face when she was incarcerated at the local pound. When she came to us, she was starved, so skinny and covered in thousands of fleas. She was our first greyhound and we adore her so much that we have since adopted another two.

Forge's story by Colleen Collier

Forge is four years old greyhound with a heart of gold. He came to live with Paul and I after injuring himself whilst still young and with his trainer. Instead of learning to race other dogs he came home to his breeder who then re-homed him with us. Forge is a funny, big, goofy boy who loves everyone – including his cat – but most of all he loves me.
